The Financial Times is one of the world’s leading news organisations, recognised internationally for its authority, integrity and accuracy. Packed with the latest news and analysis, it is a key resource for students of Business, Politics and Economics.

PLEASE NOTE: Only teaching staff and 16-19 year old FE students can set up their own account on FT.com. Unfortunately, students on degree programmes are unable to take advantage of this scheme.

Setting up your account

Go to https://enterprise.ft.com/en-gb/secondary-education/ and click on REQUEST SIGNUP LINK in the bar at the top of the screen. Enter Bradford College into the ‘Enter your school name’ search box and click on Go. Click on Request your signup link and enter your college email address.

You will be emailed a form to fill in. You will need to re-register each August as long as you are still at Bradford College and aged 19 or under.

Searching FT.com

When you log into FT.com you will see the latest news displayed on the home page.

The icon with three lines will open up a useful browsing menu for you to quickly find an area and then browse related stories by date.

If you want to search for a topic, click on the magnifying glass icon and enter your topic or keywords. Enter your search terms in the search box and sort your results by relevance or date. You can also refine your search by date, type (article, video, podcast), or by topic, organisation, location, genre (news, opinion etc.) or author.

Viewing and saving your results

From your results list, click on the article title to read it in full. You can save the article to read later by using the menu on the left hand side, and clicking on the Save button, or share articles via email, tweet or Facebook. There is also a print icon alongside the author information if you wish to print.

To view your saved articles, Click on the myFT link at the top right of the page. From here you can also create and share lists of articles.
Following a topic

Each article is tagged with a topic in red (above the article title). Use this to discover related/new content easily. Clicking on the tag will take you to the topic page which includes a list of related articles listed by date of publication, and the “Topic Tracker” list. This suggests the best articles on FT.com for you to read, and also measures how much of a topic you have covered.

Most articles and topic pages also have the option to save the topic by clicking on + Add to myFT. This allows you to follow a topic by adding it to your myFT personalised folder. You can then set up Daily or Weekly preferences of when to receive updates on your topics by email. You can also receive instant alerts as soon as an article on your topic is published.

To remove topics or change preferences, click on the myFT button in the top right of the screen.

Using FT.com for teaching

Teaching staff may find the following helpful when looking for materials:

- Use the Add to myFT to follow a topic/save articles to refer back to later
- Create and share lists of articles - share links to article via Twitter, FB, LinkedIn, email
- Filter your search to a particular region to gain analysis on the politics or economics of a country (ft.com/world) or by industry sector (ft.com/companies)
- The special reports section includes a collection of articles on a topic such as Brexit or Global Brands ft.com/specialreports
- Short reporting and insight videos available at ft.com/video or podcasts ft.com/podcasts
- The Big Read provides introductory articles on current topics. See ft.com/bigread – interesting topics could be Tesla, Bias in Advertising, and various articles on Brexit.
- FT.com produces useful charts, graphs and statistics – in easy to understand formats.

You can also access the FT on an app (via Google Play or on Apple), set up email digests or alerts, and subscribe to an email newsletter.
